

COLOR CODE

This Miami home celebrates sunrises and sunsets, sea breezes and the colors of the tropics in a white box with contemporary vignettes in an unconventional backdrop for life that's at once warm, bright and welcoming.

Contrast and interplay of soft lines and hard lines, graphic patterns and organic materials make up the children's realm, with the informal dining area and kitchen beyond. An installation made from photographic transparencies on acrylic separates the corridor.

Navy blue wall containers, and 3 swiveling loungers made of fiberglass shells with neon orange leather are bathed in white light. They form part of the flexible seating arrangement of the living room.

The living room sofa and dining room table at "mid-height" morph into a hybrid for dining in the living room and vice-versa. The beginning of a sheer flowing curtain is punctuated by a floating ball of light made with laser sintering technology.

Framing the elevator, a minimalist glow in fuchsia and white manifests the role of light as construction "material." Translucent sliding panels welcome natural light and guests in to the home.

Traditional swing doors in the master were eliminated and replaced with sliding panels and flowing sheer curtains; allowing for different levels of privacy at will.

Close-up detail of the sculptural paravan designed and produced by Oscar Glottman with images of jellyfish by Magnus Sigurdson celebrates the family's second home by the sea.

A folly is always possible in the powder room: street-wise graffiti by Francesco LoCastro with the children's names is contrasted by stainless plumbing fixtures and a port-hole mirror. A clear resin globe above throws glittering stars of light at all the walls.

Flexibility is the main feature of the children's bedroom. Sofas convert to twin beds, and a thick wool rug serves as neutral playground in-between. A desk is shared. Styrofoam shapes make for wall storage, and a confetti lamp celebrates youth.

Classic fiberglass rockers from the sixties, a rubber bar height table, and three sculptural cantilevered stools offer maintenance free comfort for viewing the horizon to the east, and the harbor and marina below.

The master features a bed and a minimalist bench, both made of solid European oak wood. A design move to introduce the earth element to contrast with the airiness of the apartment. S5
